HIST 398 Undergraduate Seminar on the Russian Revolution and its Impact on World History

Instructor: Raleigh

TuTh 11:00 AM - 12:15 PM

Arguably the most important event of the 20th century, the Russian Revolution ended centuries of tsarist autocracy and established the world's first socialist state. I want to encourage students in this writing seminar to investigate how the Great October Socialist Revolution, as 1917 was known in the Soviet Union, impacted world history. After all, the Russian Revolution not only inspired liberation movements in countries shedding the yoke of colonialism, but also reform movements such as the New Deal in our own country. This approach will greatly increase the body of primary sources available to students and will also allow them to combine any interest they might have in the Russian Revolution with other events in world history. CI E6 Research Intensive

HIST 398 Undergraduate Seminar on Cold War Summits

Instructor: Morgan

MoWe 11:15 AM - 12:30 PM

At key moments of the Cold War, world leaders met face-to-face to try to solve international crises and lay the foundations for peace. In some cases they succeeded, in others they failed. Regardless of the outcome, each of these meetings, from the end of the Second World War to the end of the Cold War, had profound consequences for the course of international politics. This seminar examines the most consequential summit meetings of the postwar era and considers the potential and the limits of diplomacy at the highest level. CI E6 Research Intensive

HIST 89 First Year Seminar: Special Topics

Instructor: Auerbach

TuTh 11:00 AM - 12:15 PM

First-years only. In this seminar we will examine the portrayal and representation of German National Socialism, the Nazis and the crimes they committed in war and postwar visual culture. We will track the transformation of the Nazi in the cultural imagination of Europe, America, and Asia as a way to understand not only the public culture of remembrance but, also the historical, political and ideological context in which the films were made. The selection of films that we will watch includes movies from the United States, Germany, Italy, France, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and Japan. This wide range of films from different countries will allow us to avoid a discussion limited by national boundaries and will enable us to further grasp the role of the cinema in contextualizing major historical events in the 20th century. HS GL

POLI/PWAD 150 International Relations and Global Politics

Instructor: Crescenzi

TuTh 9:30 AM - 10:45 AM

This course introduces students to world politics from a logical, social scientific perspective. The substantive goal is to understand why and how political actors in the international arena make the decisions. Why do nations fight? Why do they cooperate, economically and politically? How can we understand the mechanisms that encourage cooperation over conflict in world politics? This course does not simply inform students of how others have studied problems in world politics. Rather, the intent is to demonstrate how theories of world politics can be constructed and applied, and, in turn, to have students engage in this process of application. There are several options of theoretical focus for such a course. In this course the basic perspective is rationalist, a powerful but imperfect set of assumptions about human behavior. As students learn about the mechanics of international relations, we will also examine the strengths and weaknesses of rational choice. The expectation is that students will master this approach even if they are critical of the core assumptions. SS GL

POLI/ENEC 254 International Environmental Politics
